The collection contains progressively smaller yet more impactful stories that draw the reader inwards. Two children with a loaded gun, travelers seeking adventure in the Amazon, and an abandoned princess are just some of the characters in these stories that, much like all of Haddon's work, speak to us about loneliness and the difficulty of connecting socially.

Nancy in Hell

El Torres, Juan José RYP

Summary

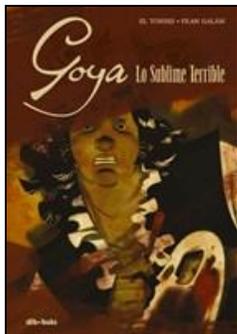

Nancy in Hell was created in homage to the B-movies we've all known and loved; the premise of a cheerleader armed with a chainsaw trapped in hell certainly seems to fit with the genre. And this version of hell is very rock 'n' roll. There are bars, beer, and girls dancing on tables. There are seedy guys who smoke, drink, and brandish automatic weapons as they rub up on said girls. Nancy will have to travel to the gates of hell, navigating her way through all the creatures that make up this strange world.

Los dientes del peine

Osama Alomar

Summary

Most of the stories in the collection are no longer than a paragraph, and some consist of a single sentence. At once allegorical and didactic, these microstories are populated by strange humans as well as anthropomorphic animals, natural elements, and all kinds of human creations. In contrast to more traditional fables, these stories involve dark messages and secrets that are difficult to identify and provoke a sense of strangeness—but others are surprising in their clarity and precision.
